Shaved in the Lion's Core.

Shaved in the Lion's Cage.

(From the London Telegraph.)

Menagerie lions are treated to strange and sometimes attractive spectacles nowadays. In Paris the serpentine dance has been frequently performed in the cages of the supposed monarchs of the desert exhibited at fs rs. At Tallins, in the lacre, two barbers and a shoemaker entered a cage of lions recently, accompanied by the tamer, in order to win a wager. One of the barbers sat down in a chair, was lathered by his colleague and shaved by the shoemaker, who wielded the razor with the most consummate coolness and skill. The trio were enthusiastically acclaimed as they emerged from the cage and won the wager.

(From The Evening World's Special Correspondent with the team.) BASEBALL PARK, PITTSBURG, Pa., July 25.—With an even dozen vic-tories to their credit since leaving Pather Knickerbecker's little village on Manhattan Island, the Giants wandered Pirates' stronghold to-day in search of fresh conquests. The last time that the Harlem cham-pionship aspirants visited the Smoky City they were used rather unkindly, Connic Mack's band, with the aid of a man named Betts, walking off with two victories out of a series of three games. The two teams have met six times since the season opened, and the Pirates have won four games.

The New Yorkers seem to have struck their pace at last and they began the game with great confidence in their ability to do the local gang.
